

We are thrilled to present the latest issue of the Washington University Undergraduate Law Review. In a time of political turmoil and uncertainty, this edition reflects the intellectual curiosity and analytical rigor of our writers, who confront some of the most urgent legal matters in society today.

In these pages, you will find thought-provoking essays on issues ranging from affirmative action, AI and intellectual property, and the expansion of the surveillance state. As technology evolves, politics shift, and new challenges emerge, the law remains a powerful tool in navigating these complexities. Our contributors probe the law's capacity to shape society, prompting readers to consider how the law can serve both as a safeguard of justice and, at times, a source of its erosion.

We are immensely grateful to our amazing editorial team, Emma Feldmeier, Tobey Giat, Coco Luo, Kerrigan Milan, Michael Qian, and Jack Samet, for their diligence and insight throughout this process. In particular, we would like to thank Matthew Bloom, our graduating Editor-in-Chief, for his tireless contributions over the past few months. We would also like to recognize Assistant Dean Megan Peabody for her help with outreach. Lastly, thank you for engaging with this work. We hope it sparks meaningful dialogue and encourages deeper reflection on the legal questions that define our world today.

Matthew Bloom, Arielle Hatton, and Yuliu Huang
Editors-in-Chief